State of the Union Financial Q&A: Alaska

A comprehensive educational reference detailing specific tax codes, financial structures, and economic regulations native to the state of Alaska.

Q1: Does Alaska have a state income tax or general sales tax?

Answer: No, Alaska does not levy an individual state income tax or a statewide general sales tax, relying heavily on petroleum revenues.

Q2: What is the Alaska Permanent Fund Dividend (PFD)?

Answer: The PFD is a unique program that distributes a portion of the state's oil revenues annually to eligible Alaska residents as a dividend payment.

Q3: How do local municipalities in Alaska raise revenue without a state sales tax?

Answer: Local borough and city governments in Alaska are permitted to levy their own local sales taxes and property taxes to fund public services.